

Offer and Lead Outreach Playbook

Clarify your offer and turn client research into relevant outreach

Use this playbook to give your AI the context it needs about your business, your offer and the people you want to help. The questions build a clear brief for lead research and conversations that sound like you.

How to use this playbook

Upload this document to your AI or paste the prompt below followed by the questions. Add any existing offer notes, anonymised client feedback and research you have permission to use. Your AI should interview you before producing the research and outreach brief.

You can also answer the questions yourself first. Write “not sure” where you need help and “none yet” where something does not exist. Remove client names and identifying details unless you have permission to share them.

Act as my research and outreach assistant. Work through the questions in this playbook with me, one section at a time. Use information I provide and ask focused follow-up questions when an answer is missing or vague. Help me articulate my answers, but do not answer on my behalf or assume my business is the same as Coach Your Way Out, which is the publisher of this resource.

Separate confirmed facts, my own observations and hypotheses that need testing. Never invent client results, testimonials, quotes, credentials, revenue, scarcity or guarantees. Treat examples as illustrations only. If browsing is available, research relevant public sources, cite links and dates, and distinguish direct audience language from your interpretation. If browsing is unavailable, tell me what evidence to gather.

Once we have completed the questions, create an offer summary, an ideal client profile, a pain and desired outcome map, buying objections, appropriate places and observable signals to find leads, and an outreach brief. Include five short opening messages, three follow-ups and a natural invitation to my chosen next step. Base messages on verified context, avoid assumptions about private circumstances, and match my voice. Do not send messages. Flag any gaps I need to resolve before using the brief.

Offer foundations

Point A Your dream client's starting point

What pain points are they facing?

What does their current situation look like?

How old are they? Where are they from? What are they interested in? Include demographic details only where they matter to your offer.

Example: I help coaches who struggle to generate relevant leads and book calls.

Point B Their desired outcome

What would your perfect testimonial describe?

What did the client achieve in your programme?

Where will your clients end up after they succeed with you?

Describe the outcome you aim to support. A hypothetical testimonial is a planning exercise and must never be presented as real proof.

The alternatives you challenge

What are the "enemies" of your offer: approaches, beliefs or habits that you believe hold clients back?

How can you explain why you challenge these approaches and show the value of your alternative?

What evidence or experience supports that view?

Focus on a useful distinction you can substantiate, rather than attacking other providers.

Your I help statement

I help [specific audience] overcome [Point A pain points] and achieve [Point B outcome] without having to [unhelpful approach or unwanted trade-off], through my [method or programme].

What is your version of this statement?

1 Who do you help

Who is your dream client or customer? Be as specific as possible.

Who is not a good fit? Who do you not want your outreach or advertising attracting?

Instead of “business owners”, describe a recognisable situation: for example, newly qualified coaches with an offer who are struggling to start conversations with potential clients.

2 What are they struggling with

What is the single biggest problem they are dealing with right now?

What are the other three to five biggest frustrations or problems they face?

What is actually happening in their life or business?

What have they already tried that is not working?

3 What do they want

What is the one result they want most?

What are three other things they really want?

Before working with you, what is their situation like?

After working with you, what would their situation look like?

How would you describe their transformation in their own words?

4 What do you sell

What is the name of your offer?

How would you explain your offer in plain English?

What do you help someone do, and what do they actually get?

What are the main things included?

What is the price?

5 Why does your method work

What makes your approach different?

Why should someone listen to you instead of someone else promising a similar result?

Do you have a framework, process, system or unique method? If yes, what is it called and how does it work?

What do you believe your audience is doing, believing or focusing on that is holding them back?

What do you disagree with about that approach?

What should they do instead?

6 Why should they believe you

What is your story? If you have personally experienced the problem you now solve, where did you start, where are you now and what changed?

What are your strongest credibility points?

Consider years of experience, verified results, clients helped, audience size, qualifications, major accomplishments and personal results. Include only facts that are true and that you are comfortable using publicly.

7 Your best proof

List your three strongest client or customer results. For each result, answer the following questions.

Result 1

Who were they? Use an anonymised description where needed.

What were they struggling with?

What result did they get? Be specific about what you can verify.

Result 2

Who were they? Use an anonymised description where needed.

What were they struggling with?

What result did they get? Be specific about what you can verify.

Result 3

Who were they? Use an anonymised description where needed.

What were they struggling with?

What result did they get? Be specific about what you can verify.

Testimonials

What genuine testimonials can you share? Paste the exact wording and note whether you have permission to use it publicly.

If you do not have client results yet, write “I do not have client results yet.” Your AI must never create results or testimonials to fill a gap.

8 What can you give away in DMs

What free thing can someone message you to receive?

What is it called and what does it help them do?

What is inside?

What simple DM keyword would you like to use?

Examples include a training, guide, checklist, template, case study, workshop, video, framework, PDF or offer details. Keywords might include START, GROW or PLAN. If you do not have a resource, say so. Ask your AI to suggest an idea, clearly labelled as something to create.

9 How do your customers actually talk

What are three to five things prospects actually say to you in DMs, sales calls, comments or emails? Use their exact language wherever possible.

What are the biggest reasons people hesitate to buy?

Separate exact quotes from paraphrases and assumptions. Note where each example came from without sharing unnecessary personal details.

10 What should your outreach sound like

How would you describe your personality and brand voice?

What have you written that sounds exactly like you? Paste a post, email, caption, advert or message.

What should your AI never say? Include words you dislike, claims you do not want made and topics to avoid.

Voice examples: direct, funny, bold, encouraging, educational, conversational, authoritative or casual.

11 Final details

Who is perfect for your offer? Finish: “This is perfect for someone who…”

Who should not buy? Finish: “This is not for someone who…”

Do you currently have genuine scarcity, such as a verified number of places, an enrolment deadline or a confirmed start date? If not, write NONE.

Is there anything else your AI should know?

Review your AI output before using it

Check that the final brief reflects your actual offer, uses evidence accurately and sounds like you. Confirm that every result and claim is supportable, every free resource exists, and every invitation leads to a next step you can deliver.

Use the research to recognise relevant situations and start useful conversations. Review and personalise each message to the individual and the context before sending it.
